

STOKES SCHEDULE

JANUARY 2014

In May 2013 Richard Swenson set out from Oregon to dribble a soccer ball to Brazil, South America. Brazil is the site of the 2014 World Cup. Teams from different countries around the world go through a series of elimination games to play in this soccer tournament. Swenson said, "I felt destined to go on this trip." The world is looking for people who are willing to risk their lives to achieve some really strange goals like dribbling a soccer ball from Oregon to Brazil.

We have met people who have said that they know that being involved in tribal missions is exactly what God has for them. These people are willing to risk the possibility of contracting a tropical disease like malaria or dengue fever. Most never really make very much money and have less than most Americans for retirement, but they still go with the Good News like those before them constrained by the love of Christ.

Pray that God will continue to raise up those who like Isaiah say "Here am I send me."

By the way Richard Swenson never lived to get to Brazil. He was hit by a pick-up truck in Oregon and killed. To what do we give our lives?
