

October 2013

Here's a quick sequel to the last news we sent out. The Lord directed us to a highly recommended cardiologist right here in our area and that resulted in a stress test yesterday. That afternoon Paul got a call from the doctor informing him that he has significant blockage in one area and there might be another that he recommends putting a stent in. The doctor checked out his schedule and said he has a space on Friday (tomorrow) and would that work out for us? Paul's very thankful his next set of classes aren't for another couple of weeks and agreed that would work for us also. SO --- tomorrow Paul will have the procedure done here at the local hospital and should spend one night there. We don't know the time or any other details yet.

We started to process this new "thing" in our lives and a few minutes later I looked over at Paul and he had this goofy grin on his face so I asked him what he was thinking about and he said "Wow! THIS is a new experience --- it's kinda like looking out and seeing a brand new unexplored mountain to climb --- a new "adventure"!" He's always had a heavy dose of "adventure" in him so instead of driving on muddy roads and caring for dying Indians, God has brought in this new situation to believe him in. Like David says in Psalm 18 "...by my God I can scale a wall (mountain --- or any other challenge) . (We'll see how the whole "adventure thing" is working when he's coming out of the anesthesia ☺) Thank you for praying us over the many mountains and valleys and walls that God has allowed over these many years! We love and appreciate you!

Because we can trust HIM!
